LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

August 30, 2017

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives,

I am submitting for your consideration “An Act Updating Laws Relating to Dangerous Drugs and Protecting Witnesses.” This legislation draws on a number of ideas that are the subject of pending legislation and brings them together in a single package that will achieve important updates to our laws relating to dangerous drugs and witness protection.

First, the Commonwealth continues to suffer from an ongoing opioid and heroin epidemic. I was pleased to join with you last year in enacting landmark opioid legislation. Our administration has been working tirelessly to implement that legislation, with tremendous assistance from our cities and towns. It is only through education, prevention and treatment that, together, we will solve this public health crisis. Our focus must remain on these three pillars of our strategy. While maintaining that focus, however, we should also ensure that those who cause our citizens the most harm by illegally selling drugs that kill people are held accountable for their actions.

In order to ensure that accountability, this legislation establishes enhanced penalties that directly target those who cause death by illegally selling drugs. No new conduct would be made illegal. When illegal drug distribution causes a death, laws that were designed to punish the act are inadequate to recognize the seriousness of the resulting harm. This legislation would provide for a penalty of up to life in prison and, like the offense of manslaughter while driving drunk, would also require a mandatory minimum sentence of at least five years.

Second, when new dangerous drugs are introduced to the Commonwealth, it takes time for the law to adapt. Our law contains a detailed list of controlled substances, divided into five classes. Until the Legislature amends the law to reference the new drug and assign it to one of the five classes, the new drug is not a controlled substance at all. People selling the drug face no consequences.

In order to fill the gap while the Legislature considers how best to classify new drugs, this legislation provides that any drug that is added to the various schedules of controlled substance by the federal government will automatically be considered a controlled substance under Massachusetts law. Historically, the federal government has responded faster to dangerous new drugs than our state has. New drugs would be assigned to one of the five classes of controlled substances under our laws in parallel with the five schedules provided for under federal regulations. The Legislature would retain the discretion to assign any new drug to a different class, or to except any new drug from our controlled substance law altogether.

Third, our justice system can function effectively only if those who participate in it—witnesses, law enforcement officers, lawyers, jurors, judges and other court staff—are free from intimidation. From 1970 to 2006, our laws protected witnesses from retaliatory conduct that took place after a witness had testified or cooperated with police by making intimidation of a witness a felony. However, in 2006 the law was rewritten in an effort to reduce gang violence. The Supreme Judicial Court considered those 2006 amendments and ruled that the law no longer covered retaliatory conduct. Therefore, in 2011, the Court ruled that a person who threatened to harm the daughter of his probation officer in retaliation for his supervision could not be convicted of this felony offense. While this may not be the result the Legislature intended in 2006, it remains the law of the Commonwealth today.

Witnesses and other participants in the justice system deserve protection not just during criminal investigations and trials, but also when they return to their communities. This legislation rewrites our witness intimidation statute so that it once again covers retaliatory conduct, while preserving the 2006 enhancements and clarifying the statutory language. The legislation also:

- Ensures that witness protection funds may be used for assistance to witnesses who remain reasonably fearful of retaliation in the aftermath of their cooperation with the government, even though the underlying investigation or proceeding has concluded;
- Provides explicit protection for family members of witnesses, court staff and law enforcement;
- Provides that if the intimidation relates to a case involving a felony punishable by life imprisonment, such as murder, that the maximum punishment could be up to life in prison rather than the current ten year maximum; and

- Clarifies that the District Court and Boston Municipal Court have jurisdiction to adjudicate any violation of this statute.

Finally, this legislation also provides a set of enhanced penalties for solicitation to commit a felony that parallel the penalties for conspiracy to commit a crime. The lack of an appropriate punishment under our law, which punishes solicitation to commit murder as a misdemeanor, has led to Massachusetts authorities requesting federal assistance in cases where a person has solicited someone to commit murder for hire in Massachusetts.

I urge your prompt enactment of this legislation.

Respectfully submitted,

Charles D. Baker,
Governor
