

Before the House Committee on Ways & Means
House Committee on the Judiciary

Testimony of the Massachusetts Newspaper Publishers Association and Boston Globe Media Partners, LLC Concerning S. 2820

True police reform is impossible without transparency. The provisions in the Senate bill that attempt to shed light on police misconduct investigations, while laudable, are insufficient to this moment. The House should seize the opportunity to ensure the utmost transparency around issues of police misconduct in the Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth's record on transparency surrounding police misconduct is woeful. Not long ago, the national organization Investigative Reporters and Editors gave the Massachusetts State Police its "Golden Padlock Award," which it provides every year to the most secretive U.S. agency or individual. In March 2020, the Supreme Judicial Court ruled that The Boston Globe was entitled to incident reports concerning the arrests of police officers who allegedly drove drunk—but only after the Globe was required to litigate the matter in court for five years. Boston Globe Media Partners v. Dept. of Criminal Justice Information Services, 484 Mass. 279 (2020). For nearly two years, the Worcester Telegram & Gazette has been forced to pursue a lawsuit against the City of Worcester for police misconduct investigation records, notwithstanding strong caselaw deeming such records to be public.

In this context, we offer suggested modifications to the Senate bill, attached to this testimony as redlines. The revisions seek to address the following shortcomings.

1. Section 6 of the Senate bill requires the certification authority to create new databases of misconduct investigations concerning specific law enforcement officers. However, those databases include only complaints that are "sustained" by the appointing authority or certification authority. Police departments routinely dismiss misconduct complaints that they deem insufficiently supported. A police department's decision to dismiss a police misconduct complaint is itself a matter of public interest that warrants public oversight and accountability. The public has a right to know whether particular officers have a history of complaints against them. Access to such information will not only ensure that the public can quickly identify potential problem officers, but will allow the public to determine whether appointing authorities are aggressively policing their own officers.

Our proposed revision to Section 6, Section 222 (d) would include in the database not just sustained complaints, but all complaints in which a determination has been reached.

2. The proposal in Section 6 for an anonymized database listing all complaints against officers is insufficient. Especially in large police forces, such as those in Boston or Worcester, anonymous complaint information will frustrate accountability and public safety. As the Supreme Judicial Court ruled earlier this year, law enforcement officials have “significantly diminished” privacy interests with respect to information relevant to the conduct of their office because they are sworn to serve the public and obey the law. Boston Globe Media Partners, 484 Mass. 279. Any alleged interest in officer “privacy” cannot overcome the public’s right to know about allegations of police misconduct.

Our proposed revisions would provide additional details designed to strengthen accountability and public safety.

3. Police departments routinely destroy records of misconduct investigations, sometimes in as little as seven years. This troubling practice prevents the public from learning the details of older complaints, which may provide early warning of problems to come. With the widespread availability of electronic storage, there is no valid reason for these records to be destroyed. Accordingly, we suggest an additional provision in Section 6 of the bill to address this problem, which we have inserted after Section 223(e).

4. A right of access to information is worth little without an enforcement mechanism. Accordingly, we propose that Section 6 of the Senate bill provide that the Superior Court may enforce the transparency requirements of the bill in a case brought by the Attorney General or any interested resident. We have inserted suggested language after Section 223(e).

5. Section 2 of the Senate bill modifies exemption (c) to the public records law, Gen. Laws. C. 4, § 7, cl. 26(c), which exempts from disclosure “personnel” records and records that unreasonably invade privacy. We believe this modification should be broadened to make clear that exemption (c) does not apply to any disciplinary measures imposed on a law enforcement officer as a result of a misconduct investigation.

The current draft states only that it does not apply to the “disposition” of such investigations, which could be interpreted to mean only the finding as to whether the complaint is sustained or otherwise disposed of. Current caselaw recognizes that most police misconduct investigation records are not “personnel” records, because a police misconduct proceeding is fundamentally unlike an ordinary personnel review. The public has a substantial interest in knowing not just whether an officer was found responsible for misconduct, but what disciplinary measures the appointing authority took as a result.

The attached redlined version of S. 2820 contains our specific recommendations as to revisions that would further the goals of enhancing police accountability and ensuring the public’s right to know. For all of these reasons, we respectfully ask that you incorporate our recommendations in the House legislation and in any final bill that emerges from this process.
